

KD Easley, lives and writes in Fulton, MO. She is the mother of two grown sons, one a nuclear technician and the other a United States Sailor, that have and continue to provide her with more material than she will ever be able to use. She also shares her home with two feline writing partners, Luna and Merlin who make sure she doesn't develop carpal tunnel syndrome by dragging her away from the keyboard for ear scratches and snacks when they've decided she's been working long enough. KD has been writing for over ten years and has published both short mysteries and novel length fiction.

Her first book, Where the Dreams End, featuring repo man, Brocs Harley and her short mystery collection, Nine Kinds of Trouble, are out and available now. Her next book, Murder at Timber Bridge, introduces amateur sleuth, Randi Black, and will be released in April of 2010 by NukeWorks Publishing. Visit Ms. Easley online at www.kdwrites.com or drop by her blog at www.kdblog.typepad.com.